

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a reckless example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest, not the right wing agenda. When large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for their bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard.

Your viewers deserve more. They deserve to be treated better than a bunch of blind followers. Thank you.
